

Eric Almquist

Eric Almquist has had a life-long interest in photography and the history of photography. He is both a practicing photographer and a collector, and has exhibited at Stanford University and local venues in Belmont, Massachusetts. His work concentrates on landscape and social landscape photography, done mainly in Nebraska, New England, and the UK. He has recently completed a project entitled “Trinity”, which focuses on the first three atomic bomb sites—Trinity (New Mexico), Hiroshima, and Nagasaki.

Eric received a B.A. from Stanford University and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in anthropology from Boston University. He is currently a Partner at Bain & Company.

Eric lives in Belmont with his wife Nanny and has three grown sons. He serves on the Board of Trustees of the Photographic Resource Center at Boston University.
